DIRECT BENEFITS

Employees with Disabilities:

- Have better retention
- Meet or exceed standards for KPIs (e.g. safety, production, accuracy)
- Help companies meet compliance requirements
- Are a significant part of an untapped labor pool

Retention

Employees with disabilities (on average) have better retention rates. Not all companies publish data related to turnover and the impact of hiring people with disabilities, but those that do show improvements from 14% to 130%.

Performance

Companies that adhere to their standards and use an inclusive hiring process achieve equal or better results with workers with disabilities. Whether your key metric is safety, speed or accuracy, employees with disabilities meet or exceed those of workers without disabilities when matched well with the job requirements.

Compliance

U.S. Federal Contractors are required to demonstrate efforts and results for recruiting, developing and retaining individuals with disabilities.

Labor Pool

The labor shortage is reaching a critical point. The US Department of Labor reported in July 2018 that, for the first time, there are more job openings than there are eligible workers to fill them. However, their reporting of available labor does not include at least 10 million Americans with disabilities available and ready to work.

INDIRECT BENEFITS

Disability Inclusive Workplaces:

- Increase efficiency of operations
- Are preferred by customers (both B2B and B2C)
- Attract more candidates
- Outperform other markets

More Efficient Operations

Data collected from Walgreens managers using adaptive and organization learning has shown an increase in operational performance up to 20%. And from another manufacturing group an increase of 15%.

Customers' Preference

92% of customers look favorably toward companies that hire people with disabilities and 87% prefer to do business with those companies. The “disability market is twice as large as the “tween” market and has almost three times the disposable spending power. This has bled over to an overly sensitive value chain with companies no preferring vendors with disability inclusivity.
